5.8 special right triangles worksheet answer key

Whether you're moving into a new home or you've lost your house keys again, it may be a good idea — or a necessity — to change your door locks. Calling a locksmith can be costly, but fortunately, re-keying a door lock is a quick DIY project to complete yourself. Purchase a Re-Keying Kit. Re-keying kits come with everything you need to make your door lock compatible with a new key. These supplies typically include new precut keys, pins for the lock's tumbler that match the precut keys and specialty tools or accessories you might need to install or use to make the process easier. Purchase a re-keying kit from the brand that made your current door lock; the supplies from different brands usually aren't interchangeable. Remove the Knob. Unpack everything in your re-keying kit and remove the doorknob to get started. You may or may not need a screwdriver, depending on what's in your kit. Find the small hole on the neck of the doorknob. With the door unlocked, push a screwdriver or the long pin included in the re-keying kit into the hole. Pull off the knob and the lock cylinder inside it. Remove the Retainer Ring. You'll see a small ring around the lock cylinder on the side opposite from the key slot. Use the removal tool in your kit or a pair of pliers to pop this ring off of the cylinder. Be careful during this process; if your kit doesn't come with a replacement retainer ring, you'll need to reinstall the old one, so you don't want it to get damaged. Remove the Cylinder Plug. Now that the retainer ring is gone, you can pull the lock cylinder plug out of the sleeve it's in. Take care when removing the cylinder, too. It's what holds the locking pins on the top of the sleeve in place, and these pins can pop out if you don't pull the cylinder out gently. If some do happen to fall out, you can replace them with tweezers. Add New Pins. Remove any old pins from the cylinder plug — but not from its outer sleeve. Then, insert new pins into the cylinder in the order described in the instructions that come with your re-keying kit. The pins may be color coded to ensure you add them in the correct order. If your kit didn't come with a special tool for this process, use tweezers to set the new pins into the cylinder. Once the new pins are in, reassemble the lock by following the steps above in reverse order. Your new lock is then ready to use with the included keys. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET Your car's electronic key fob makes it easy to unlock and open doors or even remotely start the vehicle. However, if this handy accessory breaks or turns up missing, you'll likely want to replace it as quickly as possible. Here's how to get a car key fob replacement. Contact a Dealership. Call or visit a dealership that sells your make and model of vehicle. A staff member there can order a new fob for you, and they may also have the fob you need in stock. Basic fobs typically cost between $50 and $90, although yours may cost more or less depending on the age of your vehicle and the type of remote you need, according to Edmunds. Smart keys and transponder key fobs in particular may be costlier than basic button-operated remotes, costing several hundred dollars or more to replace, states Consumer Reports. Go Online. If you prefer to do some research before making a purchase or you're looking to find a better deal, performing an online search for a key fob that pairs with your car's make, model and year can also be a helpful option. This gives you the opportunity to compare prices and learn more. For example, you might find an aftermarket fob with a button layout that you prefer over your original version. One primary downside to ordering online, however, is that you may need to wait a few days for your key to ship. This can be inconvenient if you need the fob for access to your vehicle right away. Head to a Big Box Store. If a car dealership isn't an accessible option for you, visiting a big box retailer also has the potential to yield helpful results. Stores that have automotive departments often carry generic aftermarket fobs that are designed to work for several different makes and models of vehicles. Keep in mind that you may or may not be able to program these fobs yourself; in some cases, a locksmith or dealership may need to complete the process for you. Another option is to check your local automotive supply store. An employee there can assist you in finding the remote you need. Call a Locksmith. A locksmith may stock the key fob you need or may be able to order it for you. If you've lost your actual car key in addition to the fob, a locksmith should also be able to help replace that. Locksmiths typically sell aftermarket fob key replacements, so while you won't be getting a key directly from your vehicle's manufacturer, you have the potential to save money on the cost of the fob, notes Edmunds. Programming Your Key Fob. No matter where you purchase your key fob replacement, you'll need to program it yourself or have it programmed. In some cases, a dealership may be the only place where you can get someone to program it. This all depends on the type of fob your car requires. The dealership may also charge a fee to program the new fob, so be prepared to pay extra for this service. If you're able to program the key fob yourself, it'll likely only require you to press the fob's buttons in a specific order and turn the key in the ignition several times, notes Edmunds. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET A corporation is legally required to adhere to record-keeping requirements, explains RocketLawyer. Keeping detailed and accurate corporate minutes helps you maintain your corporation's legal status and may even help limit liability in some situations. The Task of Keeping Corporate Minutes. Any time your corporation has meetings between owners, managers, partners or shareholders, you should record the minutes of these conferences. Weekly meetings could involve decisions about how your corporation is operated such as hiring and firing, daily functions or marketing campaigns. Annual shareholder meetings will cover topics such as mergers, acquisitions, conversions, new appointments, resignations, profits and more. Board of director meetings include corporation management issues, company policies, employee performance and product performance. Information to Include. Corporate minutes need not be exhaustive, but they do need to fully document all important information discussed as well as decisions made during the meeting, explains SmallBizTrends. Make sure your meeting minutes include the location, date and time of the meeting as well as who attended. List all items on the agenda with a short description to explain each item. If voting occurred, detail the vote and include how each person at the meeting voted. If anyone abstained, note this too. End the minutes with the time the meeting adjourned. Information to Exclude. Don't think of your corporate minutes as a full transcript of the meeting, cautions KSNLaw. When discussions occur, you don't need to record the conversation verbatim. Instead, you could mention the topic that was discussed. Omit any information that would be considered privileged advice of counsel unless you intend to waive this privilege in the future. Including this information could open a corporation to future liability. Corporate Minutes Format. Simplicity is the key to effective corporate minutes. Realizing that you don't have to write down every word, you may be able to make a template that you can use every time you need to record minutes. The template could include blanks that you fill in, such as basic details about the meeting, who was in attendance, agenda items, voting actions and adjournment time. Use a Sample of Corporate Minutes. Peruse a few samples of corporate minutes to get an idea of the format to use for your corporate minutes. Once you become familiar with standard corporate minutes, you probably won't find this task difficult. A sample will probably show an outline with all of the basic points of the minutes listed. You can add any discussions or votes your meeting included with the results of these actions. Pattern your own corporate minutes after the sample minutes or use various features of a sample that fit your needs. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET
